

Vaccinations

Many of the diseases your pet should be vaccinated against can be deadly, highly contagious or cause significant illness. Your pet can be exposed to these diseases by coming into contact with other animals or through the environment.

Appropriate vaccinations are an important aspect of preventative health care for pets. However, in rare cases some pets may have a reaction to the vaccine that may need medical attention.

I understand the risks associated with vaccinating my pets.

Zoonotic Diseases

There are some diseases your pets can catch which may pass to yourself or your family. These are called Zoonotic diseases.

Zoonotic diseases may be spread in different ways. To offset this risk, we recommend regular fecal exams for intestinal parasites, keeping your pet's vaccinations current, and annual wellness exams for other problems such as skin conditions that can be transmitted to your family.

I understand the risk of Zoonotic diseases to my family and what protocols my veterinarian has to help protect my family.
